Pope Benedict's resignation seen as a good precedent for the Catholic Church

Rarely has Pope Benedict XVI been more loved than when he announced his resignation.

The historic move stunned Roman Catholics — the last time a pope resigned was in 1415. It's a revolutionary act by a conservative pope steeped in tradition, one that sets a precedent and changes the dynamics for the election of Benedict's successor.

In his bombshell announcement Monday, Benedict, 85, said he's too old and weak to carry on. Speaking in Latin, he made it clear the papacy is for men physically and mentally fit. In the past few months, he said his strength deteriorated.

"This German pope's reign shall be short-lived. The next – and last – pontiff will be PETER OF ROME – who must flee the mad Turk!"
